Sri Chinmoy, an internationally acclaimed musician, composer, artist, author and athlete, captivated audiences worldwide with inspired performances of his own lyrical melodies. In Sri Chinmoy's words, "It is through music that the universal feeling of oneness can be achieved in the twinkling of an eye."

The Power of Participation

Two boys started life in different locations, under different circumstances. But because both came from dysfunctional families unable to care for them, they arrived at the same place: the Henderson Mental Health Center (HMHC) Charlee House for youth.

For more than five years, both young men have experienced ups and downs. As a result of the services they've received from HMHC, today they are poised to strike out on their own. And they've decided to take this next step as roommates.

"Success stories like these are what it's all about," said Dr. Steven Ronik, CEO of Henderson Mental Health Center, the oldest and largest nonprofit, community-based behavioral healthcare system in South Florida "To see how these two young men have developed is a testament to their perseverance, as well as the hard work and dedication of our staff. Without accurate data from the census, it would be infinitely more difficult for us to help people with mental health issues in Broward County."

Since 1953, HMHC has provided a variety of services to the community, including crisis outreach, residential living and foster care, employment services, outpatient treatment and psychosocial rehabilitation, as well as many youth and family programs. Dr. Ronik said census data are used by the federal government to distribute block grants, which are based on population. "Nearly 25 percent of the HMHC operating budget comes from the State of Florida, which derives those funds from federal allocations," he said. "Broward County is a large area and any under reporting would significantly lower our funding."

Additionally, census information is important because it reflects the true numbers and demographics of the people served by HMHC. The understanding of the community makeup derived from Census data informs program creation and staffing, according to Dr. Ronik. "One in five Americans suffers mental illness to some degree, and every culture and age cohort experiences mental illness differently," he said. "For us to best serve the mental health needs of Broward County, we have to be culturally competent, as well as culturally diverse. A complete and accurate census count puts us in position to be both."
