

Auntyji Ko Pucho

By: Auntyji

Auntyji has just returned from a cruise and had the most wonderful time. The weather was great, the ports of call were charming, the food was endless, the drinks were strong (Auntyji had even smuggled a bottle of Vodka aboard with her), and the men on the ship were plentiful. It was truly a relaxing time ... well almost, because Auntyji was on the dance floor every night and did not get much sleep. Especially memorable was the time when she watched the sun rise sitting on the deck of the ship, snuggling in the arms of that handsome man with whom she had danced the whole night ... but that is a story she will keep to herself.

Alas, all good things come to an end. She came back to find lots of letters from her readers and after having gone through them, she feels the need for another vacation. The two that she has chosen to respond to really drained her. Aren't there any "normal" CityMasala readers out there who want simple advice on simple things like what to wear or where to go? Auntyji loves to help, but she isn't a magician!

Q. Dear Auntyji, I have a problem that I can't deal with any more and desperately need some help. I am a married man with two almost grown children. I travel to another state on the west coast frequently and have been in a relationship with a woman there for about two years. We have a small child together and now she wants to get married. She doesn't know that I am already married and of course, my wife has no knowledge of my other life. I love them both and want both to be a part of my life. All this lying is getting too much for me to handle. I am constantly under stress and am always on the edge. I know I need to tell the truth but don't know how to go about it. What should I do? Double crosser from Port Orange FL

A. It constantly amazes Auntyji that there are people as selfish as you in this world. You should be ashamed of ruining so many lives around you. If you really loved these people, you would not have deceived them in such a terrible manner. At this point, your needs are irrelevant. Your needs have already caused enough damage. A person like you who cheats on his wife, lies to his children, then misleads another woman, and then commits the crime of having a child with her, deserves all the stress. What you have done is completely unforgivable.

Auntyji is going to tell you what the ideal scenario should be, though she really doubts that it will happen. You should tell both your wife and mistress the truth. Grow up and for once, admit to being the selfish and inconsiderate person that you are. They both will be very hurt. Their lives will change forever. Hopefully, for their sakes, they will be strong enough to walk away from you. Maybe, in time, they might even forgive you. Your children may want to continue to have a relationship with you. You should spend the rest of your life on your own, work very hard to make a lot of money so that you can support both your families. That might be some atonement for your sins.

Being the miserable self-centered coward that you are, you will probably not do this. You will continue to cheat on your wife and deceive the other woman. You will continue to lead her on. The only reason that you are stressed out is because the other woman wants to marry you. You will keep on justifying your actions. Your deceit will keep on getting more elaborate. Eventually, you will get caught, but being the creep you are, you will turn the situation around to make yourself the victim. These poor women will forgive you, and continue to get manipulated for the rest of their lives.

And then, there is always lightning that can strike you down... a quick solution to a messy problem! You can also try moving to Utah and becoming a Mormon. Good luck, although Auntyji really doesn't think you deserve any!

Q. Dear Auntyji, I recently got engaged to my long time boyfriend and am really happy. However, the night before we got engaged, there was a party and I ended up being intimate with my fiancé's brother. I feel horrible about this indiscretion but in my defense, I did not know what I was doing and actually didn't even realize that he was my fiancé's brother and not my fiancé. I don't know whether I should tell my fiancé the truth or keep this to myself. What if my fiancé's brother tries to blackmail me? Will my fiancé believe me or him? Should I take the chance and let this lie be or should I be honest? Dishonestly from Ellenton, FL.

Auntyji wonders where people like you, and the one before you, come from? Are you just pretending to be innocent and dumb or are you just dumb and have no character at all? Have you ever accepted responsibility for your actions? This is a wonderful way for you to start a new chapter in your life ... with adultery, deceit, lies, and blame.

You love your fiancé so much that you want to cheat on him. You are so intelligent that you cannot tell the difference between him and his brother. It was of course not your fault – it was the alcohol (that you were forced to drink). The thought of telling the truth only occurs to you because you might get caught in your lie. Let's blame it on the brother because he has the potential to become a blackmailer. If that happens, you can always question your fiancé's loyalty to you! Does that summarize your situation, the way you see it in your utter selfishness?

If you have never taken responsibility for any of your actions up until now, which Auntyji seriously thinks you haven't, DO THE RIGHT THING NOW! Tell your fiancé what happened. Apologize to him because what you have done is very wrong. Do not blame it on the alcohol or his brother or on anything or anyone else. If he really loves you, he might forgive you. You should also think about postponing your wedding. Something like this takes a long time to work out. Your relationship with his brother has changed forever and so has his. This is certainly no way to start a married life together. Some distance between you and your man might allow you to look into why this happened in the first place. You obviously have a long way to go before you can call yourself 'mature' enough to think about marriage and the commitment that it requires. You might also want to look into your drinking issue.

Auntyji doubts that you will follow all of her advice. You will probably manipulate this situation to your advantage if it does come out. Your fiancé will forgive you because you will manage to put the blame on his brother. You will continue to live in denial because people like you always feel they are the victim.

Don't forget, life is short - live it to the fullest with attitude! Auntyji@citymasala.com.